

Thomas I. Selling PhD, CPA

Tom has served on the faculties of Dartmouth, MIT, Wake Forest and Thunderbird School of Global Management. He was the Academic Accounting Fellow at the SEC in 1992.

Tom has led hundreds of management and professional education programs in 15 countries. He frequently serves as a consultant to public companies and their advisors on matters including SEC compliance, U.S. GAAP, IFRS, operational and strategic decision making, and control of international operations. He has also provided litigation support and expert witness services on a broad range of accounting topics, including foreign accounting standards and valuation.

Tom is the publisher and principal author of The Accounting Onion (www.accountingonion.com), the most widely-read blog on the internet that provides detailed commentary on financial reporting issues affecting public companies. His academic research and commentaries have been published in numerous outlets, including The Accounting Review, Accounting Horizons, Financial Analysts' Journal and CPA Journal. He also co-authored two editions of the textbook, International Financial Reporting and Analysis: A Contextual Emphasis.

Tom has recently served on the following committees: the PCAOB's Standing Advisory Group; the AICPA's Financial Accounting and Reporting Subcommittee for the CPA Examination; and the Advisory Board of the Association of Audit Committee Members, Inc. He holds a PhD in Accounting from The Ohio State University.
